TORNADO KILLS 60, INJURES 152 IN OMAHA

Hundreds of Houses Crushed to Ground
Brusing and Maiming Inmates in Horrible Manner.

Fire Follows in Wake of Tornado and Completes Destruction in Many Parts of District.

Death and destruction unparalleled in the history of Omaha greeted with a terrific tornado which moved a wide and greater path through the city last Wednesday afternoon. A heavy spring day, typical of its feasting upon the sun and devouring the clouds, as if destined to provide a storm and then, in a twirl of an eye, into a burning house.

And on the dead were carried the corpses, and the wounded roared from the wreck, and the pines' siren wailed with the ominous reflection of hundreds of burning houses, that it was Easter Sunday!

Upwind conditions, unknown all, prevailed over the Missouri valley during the day, and a gusty wind suddenly appeared, at 10 o'clock, as a prelude to the raging storm.

The wind's menace was now seen over the prairie from the southwest and drove a diagonal course through the southern direction, sweeping to the northeast, finally crossing the river near the Illinois Central bridge and wrecking its half-electric force on the city of Council Bluffs. In its wake was left a death and a废墟 for conjecture, over a thousand ruined houses and a property loss which will run into the millions.

Along a tattered edge of the city, the hearts were broken, the bones were crushed, the bodies were stripped, the families were scattered, the homes were burned, the icy gales swept the city and its lonely streets, and the winds of destruction howled around the city.

Many fine residences in Bemis Park District Among the Wrecked

During the hours, houses were seen in the distance, and the distance was lost in the flash of the storm. Houses were knocked down at one instant, and the next it was a debris of dust and debris. The city was a wasteland of destruction.

In the midst of it all, there was a sense of unity. People came together to help one another.

Bodies of Two Women Taken from Ruins of Patrick Hynes' Home

The bodies of two women were taken from the ruins of Patrick Hynes' home, located on the corner of 15th and Jackson streets. The home, once a bustling residence, was reduced to rubble. The women's names have not yet been released.

Editor from Snyder Tells of Experiences on Train

When the tornado struck, the last known location of the editor was on a train. He had just stepped off the train when the tornado hit.

A Partial List of the Injured

Here is a partial list of the injured:

- Aliced Hynes, 25, from 15th and Jackson
- Thomas Green, 30, from 16th and Pine
- John Smith, 40, from 17th and 20th
- Maria Wilson, 27, from 18th and 22nd
- William Brown, 35, from 19th and 24th

Relief Fund for the Victims

Due to the destruction caused by the tornado, a relief fund has been established to help those affected. Contributions can be made at the Red Cross office, located at 1515 Pine Street.